

Learning by Doing Director

Future Focused Education (FFE) is emerging as a leading force to re-imagine schools as the engines for health and prosperity of communities. We do this by re-engaging young people who have dropped out or are off-track to graduation. FFE is looking for a “Learning by Doing” expert to join our team to fulfil the vision of schools that can provide the best education for the students who need it the most.

We are looking for a colleague who can help us seize the innovation opportunity in New Mexico. The landscape is ripe for a new equity focused agenda that our organization has championed. We are ambitious about finding a problem solver and expansive thinker who can move beyond the typical constraints of the traditional education systems. Their work will be boundary spanning and require that they call upon the best thinking from the education, private, and not for profit sectors. Our ultimate goal is to spread a new school model that can link our young adults to careers in the sector, while also making our communities a better place to live. We do this because our future health and prosperity depends on cultivating young people as assets and we are looking for colleague who can help us make that happen.

Below are a few of the initiatives that they will lead:

- Consultation with New Mexico school districts to create a new graduation pathway focused on graduation capstones.
- Facilitate professional development for the Leadership Schools Network in Albuquerque New Mexico.
- Build new curriculum that connects real-world work-based learning experiences to in school learning.
- Advise schools and school districts on ways to make student learning public and transparent to community partners.
- Build a new frame of reference for curriculum to promote Positive Youth Development and student agency in schools across the United States.
